Travel to Budapest

The most common ways to get to Budapest are by plane, train or by road by either car or bus - although you can even get a boat from Vienna and Bratislava. Budapest is relatively easy to get to since it's located right in the heart of Central Europe.

Nearest railway station – Budapest Keleti station

Guide – Keleti Station practical informations:

Nearest airport – Budapest Ferenc Liszt International Airport

Direct bus connects the Airport with Budapest city centre:

Airport Express

Taxi: The city rides don't have fixed tariffs, but their price is formed by a taximeter based on the distance and the traveling time. The flag fee is 1000HUF (2.90€/3.10$), and the price per km is 400HUF (1.15€/1.25$). Waiting time is also charged at 100HUF/minute (0.30€/0.35$). The majority of the official Budapest taxis accept payments both in cash and via credit/debit cards. In any case, you should always carry some cash with you or inform your taxi driver if you are planning on using a bank card to avoid unwanted surprises. Payments are made in the local currency (forints).

miniBud Airport Shuttle: connect the Budapest Airport to the heart of the city, or vice versa, in under 90 minutes. Get on a transfer departing every 30 mins and running on a non-stop 24-hr schedule. Enjoy customizable drop-off options in central Budapest. Simply let your experienced driver know the location.

Arrival by international train

Direct Trains to Budapest:

Budapest is a bridge between central Europe and the Balkan region. No surprise then that the Hungarian capital enjoys excellent international rail connections. There are a dozen direct trains each day from Vienna, seven from Prague, five from Munich, two from Zurich and one from Hamburg, Berlin and Dresden.
